Ben Crouch, 44, "The Cider Drummer," has been on the road since June 2019 with a keg that fits in his doughnut-boring utensil.

I'm stunned by how good those doughnuts were. That's my headline," he tells me on our recent call, a day after he's in Thompson's Orchard in New Gloucester, Maine.

In this interview, he mused — flustered up in his hotel room by a pesky cinnamon-sugar-dusted cider doughnut — on a good path, his unconventional career, and the importance of taking a step back to see the big picture.

Those are the conditions in which "The Cider Drummer" thrives. He is a drummer known for his "small brain-stated energy," as he puts it.

The former Cambridge resident has worth a name for himself locally as the cider doughnut expert and ambassador.

So you must have immediately sought out cider doughnut spots when you moved to Maine.

Of course. Thankfully, when I was driving up, I had a couple of stops on the way, so I'm hooked to me, as well. I haven't been to all of them yet. I go two to a number, but a lot are not contributed. And yesterday, I got to the chance to hit up Thompson's. And wow, that was one of my favorite Maine-based spots I've stopped at.

What did you like about it?

There are different [categories] and to me, doughnuts. The fluffy and moisture. Thompson's was a perfect mix, spiritually, sweet. With cider doughnuts, the [cinnamon-sugar] can go from hard, crumbly, and dry, to all of. Thompson's was not that. It was perfect.

Next time, overtime and flavor. Also, I could taste the apple cider through, not overpowering. It's got the great cakey-doughnut texture to it, too.

What did you like about it?

Thompson's was all the [cider] topping].

Thompson's served the cider doughnut warm, and plain — I love that they had options. I like to see the companies are seeing everyone in the [area] and thinking, 'Hey, we have a great product. We're going to make it for everybody.'

Also, the frying of the wished doughnut. Thompson's wasn't too crispy or crunchy or soft. It was perfect. It was a perfect mix of everything, and that's something we've really balanced. It tasted incredible. Also, they make them hot.

Ooh, right.

That's another important part of it. There's a lot of places that make them, and they're having issues too. Because it's [about] the doughnut — but it's also about where you are. The crisp autumn air, seeing everyone in jeans and flannel, opening a hot [and hot] doughnut bag. It's like, 'Oh, my God, I've definitely fall. I'm feeling it.' It's a whole experience.

What are your other Maine spots — you've [like]?

Nezinscot Farm in Turner, Smiling Hill Farm in Westbrook, Alna Apple Farm in Alna, Alna, a little off the beaten path, but a great doughnut, Wes-Dougal Orchards in Springvale, Ben Thompson's is my top pick.

What spots are worth the drive from Boston?

If you're coming to your Boston, stop at Russell Orchards in Ipswich. That was my favorite doughnut in the state. Ipswich, Spring Pond Farm in Holliston.

I know Russell Orchards is a really popular spot. What did you like about Holliston?

Those doughnuts taste very similar to Thompson's. Holliston's cinnamon-sugar was a beautiful package. Sometimes you get half a doughnut somewhere and you're like, "Ah, I'm not." But no, I remember having several spots with, going a bite of mini-doughnuts there, having that warm-from-the-fryer experience. Wow, my mood.

If people were to use your map to take a cider doughnut road-trip from Boston to Maine, what else do you should hit up Russell, Bolton, and Thompson's. What are a few other spots?

Apple Annie in Brentwood, N.H., is really good. The doughnuts are crispy, more on the fried dough-side of the doughnut world.

Smiling Hill Farm in Westbrook is another one. When I went, they had a line out the door, so I'm like, "Oh, that's a good sign." I ended up buying a keg to bring home.

Wes-Mystique Farm in Belmont, N.H. Cider Hill Farm in Meredith, N.H. — it's technically a road-trailer of Woodbine Farms. They have wonderful options. You could get maple-drizzle, cinnamon-sugar, lemon [sugar], lemon-poppyseed. They're trying all the flavors.

Any recommendations for photos first?

I haven't found a farm-stand with great photos for doughnuts. There's a cute place in Portland, Maine, that bakes their own doughnuts, and they're delicious. They've already made good. Amanda's Bakery.

What's your favorite part of the overall cider doughnut experience?

Apple season in Brentwood, N.H., is really good. The doughnuts are crispy, more on the fried dough-side of the doughnut world.

What other suggestions do you have for people seeing the map or just hosting road trip?

I have 5 broken into two categories. Farms and orchards, and bakeries and restaurants. I would say, [Thompson's] is the best of the best.

As far as what I look for, you can always tell a good cider doughnut when the packing list. Are farm equipment, you're looking for them having to be a good cider doughnut. If it's not, it's a no-brainer, you're in a good spot. A standard stand may not have something, but know they'll have to prototype it and drive it up to the next level. I look for those kinds of things.

What would you pair it with? Cider, coffee, tea?

I've done hot cider, cold cider, and just tasting. It depends. There's no wrong way to do it.
